Guns Should Be Banned From College Campus

1.

Do you know how many school shooting incidents have caused for years? Do you believe the number of them is decreasing? Or increasing? In fact, the graph which expresses the change in the number of incidents produces sharp growing curve from 2011 to 2014. It is clear that students and teachers bringing guns have caused shooting incidents in school. There are some reasons which explain why guns should be banned from the college campus.

In October 9, 2015, a 18-years-old student was arrested because he caused a shooting incident at Northern Arizona University. As a result of his shooting, one student died and the other three students were wounded. There are also additional three school shootings in October, 2015. The total of these incidents is four, and it seems too large number which expresses the number of school incidents of guns. Someone in a debating website argues that “It would help save the students and create a better and more safe environment for the students to learn.” (“It” means “Guns should be allowed in schools.”) Is it right? So why were such many students injured on campus? My opinion opposes his statement.

“What were you going to do if a student next to you suddenly stood up and pointed a pistol at you?” My uncle asked me when I was a junior high school student. He often visited the U.S. because of his business, and I interviewed with him about gun law in the U.S. He explained me why the U.S. cannot abolish gun law. He knew that people in the U.S. need guns, but he was against having firearms in school. Then, he asked me the question. “I have no idea. Probably, I cannot do anything”, I answered. “So, are you just shot?”, he asked again, and I could not get my answer. “If you had a gun, you could also counter the student. However, the matter should go worse. Nobody could stop it.” I support his opinion, and I think bringing firearms on the college campus should not be allowed.
